Cooperative Graduate School System

Due to the progress and further sophistication of science and technology, research fields have become more departmentalized and specialized. New interdisciplinary fields have emerged that defy the boundaries of traditional academic fields, leading to the need for integrated research.

The vast amount of knowledge needed to take interdisciplinary research from basic principles to the application stage has made it necessary for researchers from different fields to cooperate with each other. In order to fulfill that need, there is increased demand for new, integrated, and interdisciplinary methods of educating researchers.

The first system of the Cooperative Graduate School System was created to respond to these academic and social needs. We have worked toward forging links with the large number of national, independent, and private experimental research institutes in and outside Tsukuba Science City. We employ researchers from these institutes as visiting professors and associate professors, thereby giving our students the opportunity to have their work supervised by researchers from leading edge research facilities. It aims to diversify and extend the educational and research domain for further enhancement of graduate school education and qualification of students, and to contribute to the development of science and technology by promoting exchange with research institutes.
